Mass Fatalities Conference 2007

“Developing a comprehensive and compassionate response”

Mass Fatalities Planning in your Community

Recent events have shown...

Recent events have shown that mass fatalities planning is a necessary part of preparedness planning. Events such as 9/11, Hurricane Katrina, and the threat of pandemics clearly illustrate the need for mass fatalities preparedness on the Federal, State, Local, and Tribal level.

Mass fatalities response plans must employ a comprehensive approach, blending together government and community resources. These plans must foster an interdisciplinary response, pulling resources and best practices from law enforcement, emergency management, public health, behavior health, mortuary services, public information, and a variety of other disciplines.

Recommended Participants

- Elected Officials
- Tribal Officials
- Public Health
- Emergency Management
- Law Enforcement Officials
- School Officials
- Medical Examiners
- Funeral Directors
- Hospital Directors
- Business Leaders
- Others as appropriate

Conference Objectives

- Help participants better understand issues associated with Mass Fatality incidents, including lessons learned and best practices.
- Address the gaps and short comings in mass fatalities planning nationwide
- Provide a forum for interagency collaboration and understanding.

Only by employing an integrated, multi-jurisdictional approach can we hope to effectively respond to a mass fatalities incident and begin the emotional healing process in our communities.
